EN 1: Engineering in the Kitchen

Steven Bell

Logistics

I will be checking in on project 4

Plan on being done 12/1, with show-and-tell 12/4

Ever questioned why we need to clean more than 5 items (cookwares, chopping board, containers, stove, kitchen surfaces, dining table...) after cooking a meal? This is an ancient system we've used since the beginning of fire. But we no longer have to cook over fire.

We found a solution to reduce the 5 items into 1, and then to 0. All while enabling unseen simplicity and affordability for robotic cooking. We are confident that this is the inevitable future for cooking: not unlike what the iPhone is to mobile phones.

We are looking for a co-founder with a mechatronics background and experience with consumer electronic products. Other preferable experiences include: experience in designing and hacking CNC, 3D printing or robotic arm systems, hands on rapid prototyping with retail hardware on the market, ingress protection, Arduino/Raspberry pi, DFM, good material knowledge.

Give yourself a smart gift.

I installed a kitchen faucet that can connect to Alexa (“Alexa, ask <brand> to dispense 1 cup hot water”). The problem is that when the faucet is running, Alexa can’t hear me to tell it to turn off. Well that’s one problem, actual utility is another. Also, no timer.

(1/2) Out running this morning on a new route and a lady runs past me.

Despite only passing, when I get home @Strava automatically tags her in my run. If I click on her face it shows her full name, picture and a map of her running route (which effectively shows where she lives)

(2/2) This is despite the fact that I don't follow her and she doesn't share her activity publicly.

So basically if someone sees a woman running alone there's an app they can go to see her name, picture and address 🤖

What kind of technology should we be creating?

What kind of technology will we build?

What are some technologies that make us more human?

What are some technologies that make us less human?
